

LATAM FIRMS HELP PENGUIN RANDOM HOUSE IN THE ACQUISITION OF SANTILLANA

LatAm firms help Penguin buy Santillana assets

Firms across 15 jurisdictions have helped New York publisher Penguin Random House buy the trade book business of Spanish and Portuguese language publisher Santillana.

Penguin turned to Iberian firm Cuatrecasas, Gonçalves Pereira, which led the transaction, as well as Brazil's Pinheiro Neto Advogados, Argentina's Pérez Alati, Grondona, Benites, Arntsen & Martínez de Hoz (h), Chile's Carey, Colombia's Posse Herrera Ruiz, Mexico's Barrera, Siqueiros y Torres Landa, the Uruguayan, Paraguayan and Bolivian offices of Ferrere, Consortium Centro América Abogados - El Salvador, Ecuador's Pérez Bustamante & Ponce Abogados, the Dominican Republic's Castillo y Castillo and Peru's Rubio Leguía Normand. Venezuela's Araque Reyna Sosa Viso & Asociados and Panamanian firm Fabrega, Molino & Mulino are also thought to have been involved in the deal, but this was not confirmed before publication.

Madrid-based Santillana was advised by Spain's Uría Menéndez. Some of its Latin American branches are believed to have been advised by in-house counsel, however Peru's Estudio Eche copar, a member firm of Baker & McKenzie International and Chile's Cariola, Díez, Pérez-Cotapos & Cía Ltda advised it in those jurisdictions.

Spanish media sources have valued the deal, which was announced on 19 March, at US$99 million.

Once the deal closes, Santillana's trade book business will be merged with Penguin's Spanish language arm. The acquisition of Santillana is part of a strategy by Penguin to expand its presence in the lucrative Spanish-language book publishing sector. The New York publisher has also identified Brazil as a strategic market in the past – it will take over Santillana's Brazilian arm, Objetiva, as part of the transaction.

The acquisition brings a point of entry for Penguin into a number of countries in the region, including Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia, Paraguay, Venezuela, Dominican Republic and some Central American states. It is the first international acquisition by the company since it was formed through the merger of Penguin and Random House by their respective owners, the UK's Pearson and Germany's Bertelsmann, in July 2013.
